FOREWORD

This book is a fulfillment of an idea formed many years ago. This idea had its origin in experience of the inexactness, the extraordinary lack of precision which prevails in all types of operation in Oklahoma dealing with human personalities. Such operations include government itself, the political activities so-called, or the machinery by which our public officers are selected, public activity in connection with proposed public measures, large businesses with wide, sometimes approximately universal, contacts with the general population which are consequently affected by public attitude towards them and their plans. All these activities are concerned primarily with human personalities.

Yet these activities are carried on practically without any precise information concerning those personalities with which they deal. As a consequence, social, political, governmental, even large business operations are lacking in exactness in this essential point of general contact to a degree that is not even temporarily permissible in other phases of the same operation. Our great business concerns maintain the best type of technical organizations for the purpose of introducing precision into every element of their operation except this, perhaps the most important of them all. Anyone who has ever attempted to organize a statewide political campaign in Oklahoma has almost immediately become acutely aware of the lack of exact knowledge concerning the fundamental attitudes of important individuals and particularly of the basic facts in the lives of those individuals which would determine those attitudes. Governments in Oklahoma have succeeded or have failed in proportion to the extent to which those persons operating them have been able to assemble the information which permitted them to decide and act with understanding of what the reactions of the dominant personalities of the state would be to their policies and plans.

No more important service can be rendered to those operations called social in the widest sense in Oklahoma than in the assembly of such information as will make it possible to estimate the fundamental reactions and attitudes of the individuals which make up the social order here, and thus accurately to estimate what their reaction will be to such issues and policies as may confront them. Such information as heretofore has been available has been scattered, piecemeal in the minds of a limited number of individuals who have specialized in this field and who for that reason have been looked upon as expert political and governmental advisors. No one apparently has ever considered it very important to have all this material available so that it may be referred to when needed, and independently of the variable memory of some individual who may not be available when the information is desired. Yet these reactions are always consequent upon a bent of each individual which can be largely determined from the public facts of the individual's life. Every man is a complex of his physical inheritance, his education, his previous experience and the economic and social situation which makes up his present environment. These facts are ascertainable and there is no reason why when secured they should not be turned into a permanent record which by that token and by its enormous importance in the activities of the state should become priceless to any individual or organization which deals with mass psychology.

Such a task if carried out ideally would call for such information about every individual in the state, together with the classification of those individuals and attitudes in such form that they could be dealt with en masse. Such an undertaking is of course an utter impossibility because of its magnitude. But very much the same result may be secured by means of a well known fact of human nature, to-wit, that in all matters which do not immediately involve the emotions of the individual, and which require the application of intelligence and capacity for decision, the great mass of all populations are almost completely susceptible to leadership. In every community there are a few individuals, frequently one individual, whose influence over the thought and decision of the community is paramount. There are a limited number of individuals in Oklahoma whose decisions combined would effect the decision of the entire state upon any ordinary matter. Such individuals by virtue of their control of means of communication and publicity, employment, purchasing power, educational and religious institutions and utterances, and their interest and activity in this field, are able at any time to determine the thought of a large majority of the state.

Such a task as we have been contemplating then can be effectively accomplished if the personnel of this group of primary influence can be determined and the basic psychological factors of these individuals assembled in accessible form. This task again is not susceptible of immediate or of complete accomplishment. But it can be undertaken and an approximation to success in it can be achieved.

This book is a representative of such an attempt. It aspires to the selection of those outstanding personalities in the various counties of the state who by virtue of their relations to their various communities occupy positions of much more than average influence in the thought of other people. The method used for this selection was consultation with outstanding political and community leaders of various types in each county, and their selection, of those individuals in their communities of the class mentioned, compared and verified with the opinions of other leaders, established the list for each county. This was followed by an assembly, primarily from the individuals themselves, of the basic public information about these individuals which would shed light upon their attitudes and mental processes.

The task has been enormous. It has required the continuous operation of a large number of people throughout the state for a period largely in excess of a year. It has required the expenditure of very large sums of money; it has far surpassed all preliminary estimates both of effort and of cost. But the results should be useful, as the first attempt towards making it possible that public activity be a scientific operation instead of the hit-or-miss affair it heretofore has been.

No one can be more ready than the publishers to admit the incompleteness of this final result. Such an assembly can never be complete for two reasons: first, because the best informed local authorities are unaware of some of the lines of influence that operate in their communities and we have been compelled to follow the judgment of the best informed local authorities. Some people have probably been left out in every community who should be included in such a list as this. The belief is justified, however, that the assembly here presented is at least ninety per cent complete for the time when the lists were made up. The second factor of deficiency is that such a list is always incomplete within a few months after its assembly. A society, in Oklahoma as elsewhere, is a living thing. Every new social and political activity brings to the surface new factors of influence hitherto unknown. This, of course, will be true in this field; a number of leaders will be active in Oklahoma this year who are not included in the book because their activity and influence were unknown, in many instances had not even been developed, at the time this information was assembled. Movement of active and influential figures from place to place also has its effect. But taken as a whole, the basic elements of influence and activity in Oklahoma's public affairs are included herein.

Included are many names of persons who would deny that they have a place in such a book. Many of the most influential persons in the state insist that they are not politicians, and take no interest in government; yet their influence is perhaps greater than that of those persons in their community who are obviously politically minded, and when they see fit to exert this influence it is an enormous factor in activities of various kinds in their community. Numerous bankers, business men, church men, and educators of this type are included herein.

The book is assembled on a self-indexing basis. The counties will be found arranged alphabetically and the names of the individuals in each county are also in alphabetical order. The preliminary information for each county is primarily of interest to the active politician; the material in the body of the book is equally useful to the politician, the public officer, the large business man, the educator, and perhaps most of all to the newspaper man. It will be found to be the most complete assembly of personal information about important Oklahoma people that has ever been made in Oklahoma.

It is probably unnecessary to mention that the material included in this book, with the exception of the photographs, has been assembled entirely without cost to the persons included and without any initiative upon their part. No person has been included at his own request, but only upon the deliberate judgment of the best informed active leaders in his community. No charge has been made for including any person, and no person included has been permitted to prescribe the material printed concerning him. The copy is entirely devoid of advertising for any person.

Obviously a work of this magnitude cannot be carried through without many inaccuracies occurring. Effort has been made at complete elimination of errors and inaccuracies but this work has passed through the hands of nearly one hundred workers first and last and the human equation under such circumstances makes the presence of errors unavoidable. Accuracy in such a wide compilation is a growth and we hope that succeeding editions of the book, which are expected to issue each two years, will enable us to make it at once more accurate and more comprehensive.

In the assembly of this information we have had the friendly co-operation of many men and women throughout the state. In every county there are leaders of both parties and in non-political activities to whom we are under deep obligation for active and valuable co-operation. There are others whose help has been of such far-reaching, state-wide importance that the book would have been impossible without their co-operation. Chief among these is W. C. McAlister, formerly Secretary of the State Election Board, who read the entire manuscript and who gave us unlimited access to his probably unequalled wealth of statewide political information. The enthusiastic and effective co-operation of Lew Wentz, Corb Sarchet, Felix Duvall and Harry Cragin of Ponca City at an early and critical stage in the project was of almost determining value. Similarly appreciated is the extremely valuable co-operation of George Key, A. C. Alexander, Byron Shear, Ed M. Semans, Fred Bearly, Fred Clarke, and W. B. Estes of Oklahoma City; Grant R. McCullough, Newt. R. Graham, Geo. Schwabe, Wesley E. Disney, Omer K. Benedict, R. L. Davidson, and Frank Long of Tulsa; Henry S. Johnston of Perry; Geo. L. Bowman of Kingfisher; Frank Parkinson of Enid; Mrs. Kelly Brown and Charles A. Moon of Muskogee; Mrs. Lola C. Pearson of Marshall; Tom Anglin of Holdenville; Vernon S. Whiting of Pawhuska; John C. Luttrell of Norman; Wade Loofbourrow of Buffalo; Elmer V. Jesse of Mangum. Mrs. Beulah H. Cureton, formerly of Muskogee, now of Oklahoma City, and Mrs. Max Hampton of Anadarko, were a part of the regular force that worked upon the book, but added a statewide knowledge and contact that was invaluable in its production.
